HE ATE THE LAST PIE!

In the summer of 1864 I passed two days at the headquarters of General Grant at City Point, Va, and thus had an opportunity to observe the way of life of this most democratic of the Union Commanders. He messed with his staff, and at his table sat familiarly every member of his military household. The expenses of the mess, I was told, were divided at his table sat familiarly every member of his military household. The expenses of the mess, I was told, were divided among the various members, not in equal proportions, but according to the rank of the various members, and in a manner satisfactory to all. There was no she mad already gone through that cour parade in either furniture or equipage. or parade in either furniture or equipage. Everything seemed to be for use, and arranged to economize hoth space and attention. The crockery was scanty and of the plainest description, and the fare, though abundant in quantity, was of a quality that sight he found on the table of any well-to-do workingman in the North. A chop, with a cup of coffee, served for breakfast; a bit of roast beef, it family present flew shoot with wonwith petatoes and hard tack, flanked by a dish of pork and greens, sufficed for the 5 o'clock dinner, which had neither pas-try nor dessert. To descend from his carriage and sautice his chief was but the work of a moment; but the General, irrilated by the style and preteution of the officer, was in no grimness the General ied him through the modifest part of the road, and did not release him until he was wet to the skin—as wet as was the General himself. Then to dismlesed him with a few cut remarks which were not overheard by til orderly. Their purport, however, was conjectured by the General's staff, for they observed that the officer never again appeared at headquarters in a close carriage.

Another amusing anecdote was related to me by one of General Grant's staff.
